

POST-ELECTION COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP TRACKER

UPDATED OCTOBER 27, 2022

DEBRA CURTIS, MEG GILLEY, AMY KELBICK,
KATIE WALDO, RODNEY WHITLOCK

This document serves as a tool to track key congressional positions, as well as potential and pending changes that are relevant to health policy on Capitol Hill. It covers US House of Representatives and US Senate leadership and membership of the healthcare committees of jurisdiction. We will update this document after the election when Congress returns, to determine the answers to the speculation below.

SENATE AND HOUSE LEADERSHIP

In the Senate, Democratic leadership is likely to remain unchanged regardless of the election outcome. In the House, the outcome of the election will have a significant impact on leadership. Should Democrats retain control, it is possible that the entire leadership team will remain in place. If Democrats lose control of the House, it is possible that the entire leadership team will be replaced with a new team of younger members. Current Democratic Caucus Chair Hakeem Jeffries (D-NY) is considered the frontrunner to lead House Democrats should there be a change in leadership.

On the Republican side, it is highly likely that Senator Mitch McConnell (R-KY) will maintain his leadership role regardless of the outcome of the election. In the House, Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-CA) is likely to become speaker if Republicans take the majority. While a challenge to McCarthy by the most conservative members of the Republican Conference is always possible, that danger is greatest if Republicans do not take the House.

We expect that Representatives Pallone (D-NJ) and McMorris Rodgers (R-WA) will remain the Democratic and Republican leadership of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Should Republicans win the House, they will likely need to add as many as a dozen new members to the committee. Potential Republicans that could be added to the committee include the following Members of Congress, and it is always possible that newly elected members could be rewarded with a spot on a key committee:

- Diana Harshbarger (TN)
- Stephanie Bice (OK)
- Mariannette Miller-Meeks (IA)
- Michelle Steel (CA)
- Kat Cammack (FL)
- Jay Obernolte (CA)
- Troy Balderson (OH)
- Cliff Bentz (OR)
- August Pfluger (TX).

If Democrats move to the minority, they may have to remove members from the committee. If they maintain House control, they will need to replace members who are not returning. Democrats almost never appoint freshman members to exclusive committees, so that is unlikely. Potential new members of the committee could include the following:

- Troy Carter (LA)
- Teresa Leger Fernandez (NM)
- Suzanne Bonamici (OR)
- Kathryn Manning (NC) or Deborah Ross (NC).

HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE

The below chart outlines the current Democratic and Republican membership of the House Ways and Means Committee. Three Democrats and two Republicans are not returning, including Ranking Member Kevin Brady (R-TX). This leaves an opening for a new Republican chair/ranking member. Three Republican Members of Congress are vying for this role: Vern Buchanan (R-FL), Adrian Smith (R-NE) and Jason Smith (R-MO). Two Democrats and one Republican are in competitive races: Dan Kildee (D-MI), Steven Horsford (D-NV), and David Schweikert (R-AZ).

| Stephanie Murphy (FL)             |   |

Current conventional wisdom suggests that Buchanan has the edge to be the next Republican leader of the Ways and Means Committee. If Democrats hold the House, each side will need to replace its members not returning. If Republicans take the House, the committee ratios will flip. Republicans will need to appoint roughly 10 new members to the committee, and Democrats will likely be forced to remove several of their current members from the committee. Potential Republican Members of Congress that could be added to the committee if Republicans win the House include:

- Greg Steube (FL)
- Blake Moore (UT)
- Randy Feenstra (IA)
- Beth Van Duyne (TX)
- Michelle Steel (CA)
- Claudia Tenney (NY) or Nicole Malliotakis (NY)
- Mike Carey (OH)
- Michelle Fischbach (MN)
- Nancy Mace (SC).

If Democrats maintain House control, they will need to replace members who are not returning. Democrats almost never appoint freshman members to exclusive committees, so that is unlikely. Potential new members of the committee could include the following:

- Shontel Brown (OH)
- Sean Patrick Maloney (NY)
- Ritchie Torres (NY)
- Joe Neguse (CO).

SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE

The below chart outlines the current Democratic and Republican membership of the Senate Finance Committee. Four Republicans are retiring: Senators Richard Burr (R-NC), Rob Portman (R-OH), Pat Toomey (R-PA), and Ben Sasse (R-NE). No Democrats on the Senate Finance Committee are retiring, but three are in potentially competitive reelection races: Senators Michael Bennet (D-CO), Maggie Hassan (D-NH) and Catherine Cortez Masto (D-NV).

| Sheldon Whitehouse (RI)            | Richard Burr (NC)                      |
| Maggie Hassan (NH)          | Rob Portman (OH)                       |
| Catherine Cortez Masto (NV) | Pat Toomey (PA)                        |
| Elizabeth Warren (MA)              | Ben Sasse (NE)                         |

Regardless of the election outcome, we expect that leadership of the Senate Finance Committee will remain with Senators Wyden (D-OR) and Crapo (R-ID).

Potential Republicans that could be added to the Senate Finance Committee to replace retirements, or if the ratios increase to reflect the election outcome, include the following senators:

- Marsha Blackburn (TN)
- Deb Fischer (NE)
- Mitt Romney (UT)
- Rick Scott (FL)
- Tom Cotton (AR)
- Dan Sullivan (AK).

Potential Democrats that could be added to the Senate Finance Committee if the ratios increase to reflect the election outcome include the following Senators:

McDermott+ Consulting

- Kristen Gillibrand (NY)
- Mazie Hirono (HI)
- Tammy Duckworth (IL).

SENATE HEALTH, EDUCATION, LABOR AND PENSIONS COMMITTEE

The below chart outlines the current Democratic and Republican membership of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions (HELP) Committee. Other than Ranking Member Richard Burr (R-NC), there are no retirements on the committee. Senator Hassan (D-NH) is the only committee member in a competitive reelection race.

Leadership for the HELP Committee in the 118th Congress will see significant changes. As noted, Ranking Member Burr is retiring. As a result, there will be new Republican leadership for the Committee. In order of seniority, Senator Paul (R-KY) is next in line to become the Republican HELP Chair/Ranking Member (highlighted in purple). Depending on election outcomes, Senator Paul could also be in line to be the Republican leader of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee. Senator Collins (R-ME) is likely to become the Republican leader of the Appropriations Committee. So, there is a chance that Senator Cassidy (R-LA) could end up being the Republican leader of the HELP Committee.

On the Democratic side, Chair Murray (D-WA) is expected to become the Democratic leader of the Appropriations Committee. Should she give up her role at the HELP Committee for that position, Senator Sanders (I-VT) is next in line to become the Democratic HELP Chair/Ranking Member (highlighted in purple).

Potential Republicans that could be added to the Senate HELP Committee to replace retirements, or if the ratios increase to reflect the election outcome, include the following:

- Marsha Blackburn (TN)
- Incoming freshmen (Mehmet Oz, for example, should he win).

Potential Democrats that could be added to the Senate HELP Committee should the ratios increase to reflect the election outcome include the following:

McDermott+ Consulting

- Tammy Duckworth (IL)
- Incoming freshmen (John Fetterman, for example, should he win).
